

7. Ethos. Where does the writer establish credibility? In your opinion did it feel relevant and sufficient to this topic at this stage.

- The ethos is clearly stated, as the author participated in community services and discusses how before she had no idea about how much stuff actually goes on behind the scenes and how after experiencing it first hand she had a whole new perspective.

8. Pathos. Does the pathos work with the topic? What is the dominant impression, tone or impact of the inquiry as discussed in the proposal.

- The pathos works very well with the topic. The author describes how satisfied the whole project made her feel. More importantly how the children and parents reacted and how that made her feel as well.

9. Logos. Evaluate the organization and train of reasoning. (As a reader, could you follow the progress of ideas, the transition points, the interpretations?).

- I could follow the points and progress of the ideas, but I think it should have transitioned somewhere into more research about community service instead of just personal experience and thoughts.
